Pigeons are everywhere because of their close relationship with mankind. Whether or not you are pigeon fancier, you can't fail to notice that pigeons are always around. The connection between us and pigeons goes through history, this relationship started back in ancient times. This was when pigeons were rock doves, the ancestors of today's feral pigeon.

Why are Pigeons Everywhere? - Pigeonpedia

On a global scale pigeons live all over the world. With over 300 species of pigeons, you will find them scattered around the whole planet. The only exceptions are places of extreme heat or cold. For example you won't find them within the Arctic Circle or on the continent of Antarctica. Although they are hardy birds and do live in cold climates, they don't inhabit areas of extreme cold.

People domesticated pigeons, and brought them wherever they went as pets or for food. Pigeons are like rats, in the sense that they're good at breeding and surviving in lots of different environments. So the short answer is, people brought pigeons wherever they went, and the pigeons, who may have originally been domesticated, went feral.

Basic Description. A common sight in cities around the world, Rock Pigeons crowd streets and public squares, living on discarded food and offerings of birdseed. In addition to the typical blue-gray bird with two dark wingbars, you'll often see flocks with plain, spotted, pale, or rusty-red birds in them. Introduced to North America from Europe in the early 1600s, city pigeons nest on buildings and window ledges.

In wheat fields, corn fields, on dairy farms, in granaries and pretty much everywhere in Idaho, pigeons are there. The state's pigeon population is unknown, but a local ranch manager told me that one summer he and his buddy killed 1,000 birds and it didn't even put a dent in the population. Here's the gear we used to get it done.
